19. That all the sufferers, who lost their huts on accidental fire, should get relief as reasonable enough But the distribution of relief limits itself to Cultivators When reliefs are given free of Cost to three of them, there should be proportionate reduction in the other facilities extended Otherwise the aggregate value of relief given to each of these three men excluding free site would be very much more than that to each of the other two These two men might well lay a claim, which could easily be developed into a grievance eventually, for a further quantum of relief equivalent to the value of free Sites given to the other 3 men The Mtg may not be able to resist the claim with any fairness on their side, and if the claim should be allowed, it would mean further expense To avoid all possible future complications it is desirable that the monetary value of the relief to each of the five men should be equal, so that equity might be respected

There can be no "claim" when a concession is proposed to be given. Much less a grievance
